Prasad Types

- Throughout the year, excluding Annakut, only two types of Prasad are to be prepared: Maghas and Mohanthal.
- Ingredient labelling will apply only to these two types of Prasad.
- Preparation of any other type of Prasad requires prior approval from the National Kitchen Lead.

Prasad Labelling

- All Prasad boxes must include the following key details: Ingredients, allergens, use-by date, and consume-within instructions.
- For existing Prasad boxes, an appropriate food safety labelling sticker must be applied.
- For new Prasad boxes, the appropriate food safety labelling will already be preprinted.
- Any Annakut Prasad distributed must also include the appropriate labelling on the box containing the Prasad.

Prasad Use by Date

- The use-by date will be determined based on the date the Prasad is prepared.
- For Maghas, the use-by date must be 21 days from the date of preparation.
- For Mohanthal, the use-by date must also be 21 days from the date of preparation.
- The Prasad preparation date must be affixed to the container storing the Prasad before it is placed in the Prasad boxes, and the calculated use-by date must be included.

Prasad storage

- Prasad must be stored in a cool and dry place away from direct sunlight.

Prasad disposal

- Prasad boxes must not be distributed past their use-by date, even if they have been stored in a cool dry place.
- Prasad must not be frozen in an attempt to extend the expiry date.

Wet Cooked Prasad

- Examples of Prasad that qualify as wet cooked include: any item with Potato, Daal, Rice, etc.
- Any leftover wet cooked Prasad must be checked and tasted for its quality before distribution.
- If the taste is found to be stale or compromised, with the decision of the Kitchen Lead, it must be disposed of straight away and MUST NOT be distributed.
